RE: "The Jesuits of Truth have convened a meticulously organized conference today to unveil historical documents pertaining to "The Lost Civilizations of the CIS First Humans." This event has generated significant discourse as it openly challenges established scientific norms, positing that the newly presented evidence lends credence to the existence and subsequent destruction of a hypothesized tenth planet within our solar system, often referred to as the "Water" Planet or Planet Krypton. The implications of these revelations could potentially reshape our understanding of planetary science and the historical narratives surrounding early human civilizations."

OPENING STATEMENT(s) From the Conference on "The Lost Civilizations of the CIS First Humans."

Iraqi Natural History Museum reveal a narrative about a forgotten world and its cataclysmic end, which resulted in the formation of a sprawling asteroid belt situated between Mars and Jupiter.

These scrolls intricately describe the striking crimson sun of Krypton, detailing how, during its last days, it bathed the terrain in an ethereal light, highlighting the distinctive characteristics of this mysterious planet.

The vivid imagery presented in the texts allows for a deeper understanding of the environmental and astronomical phenomena that may have contributed to the planet's demise, offering a glimpse into a civilization that once thrived under the glow of its unique star.

The creators of this historical manuscript assert that the radiant color of the sun significantly modifies the way colors were perceived within the surrounding environment, while simultaneously affecting the behavior and physiological responses of the local populace.

The brilliance of the sunlight generates a pronounced distinction between areas of shadow and those that are brightly lit, resulting in an otherworldly ambiance that enchants both visual perception and creative thought.

The narrative explores the ways in which the residents manage their everyday existence amidst the profound awareness of their planet's impending demise.

As their leaders implore the citizens to acclimate to the unique challenges posed by their environment, heavily influenced by the unyielding intensity of the sun, a clandestine agenda unfolds.

These leaders had secretly devising plans to construct a fleet of interplanetary cargo vessels, aiming to escape their deteriorating world, highlighting a stark contrast between public rhetoric and private intentions.

Among the foremost experts in the Multiverse, there exists considerable discourse surrounding the final days of Krypton, the Water Planet, particularly concerning the timing and mechanisms of its destruction.

It is not an exaggeration to assert that a plethora of theories has emerged, including the notion that the so-called tenth planet may never have existed at all.

This perspective posits that the narrative surrounding it could be a fabrication, a mythos crafted to impart moral lessons to the inhabitants of the Multiverse about the perils of unchecked technological advancement. Such advancements, initially intended to enhance the quality of life for the Multiverse's denizens, ultimately led to a disconnection from the ethical considerations necessary to wield such immense power responsibly.

As a founding member of the Palmdale Chapter of the Jesuits of Truth, I remain steadfast in my decision to refrain from engaging in the various arguments put forth, as none of the proposed theories adequately confront the well-documented historical reality of a substantial planet, which ancient texts denote as the "Water Planet of Krypton."

This historical acknowledgment stands as a significant point of reference that transcends the speculative nature of contemporary debates surrounding the subject.

The acknowledgment of a former tenth planet within our solar system, now represented solely by a vast expanse of fragmented asteroids, challenges the notion that this narrative is merely a fabrication of an imaginative early thinker, designed to instill fear and hinder technological progress.

This phenomenon can be likened to the accounts attributed to the First CIS Humans, who purportedly crafted tales of their civilization's decline, as exemplified in the myths surrounding Atlantis and the Lost Continent of Mu. In these legends, the advanced scientific breakthroughs, particularly those involving "zero plus" energy devices that harnessed the power of blue crystals, transitioned from being a source of salvation for their technologically advanced society to a means of destruction.

According to these narratives, the misuse of such power nearly led to the annihilation of their planet and resulted in the extinction of a significant portion of the First Humans, illustrating the potential dangers inherent in the misuse of advanced technology.

This discussion represents yet another instance in which I refuse to veer away from the path of rational discourse and become entangled in the convoluted arguments that often characterize such debates, particularly regarding the destruction of Krypton.

designates Earth as the "Prison Planet," highlighting its significance within a larger cosmological framework.

Numerous established scholars have largely dismissed the notion of a water planet that once existed within our solar system, equating it with the mythical planet Krypton. This skepticism primarily stems from the portrayal in ancient mythology, which suggests that KRYPTON orbited a dying red star. Scholars have gone so far as to characterize the pursuit of this theory as a misguided endeavor, viewing it as an attempt to transform science fiction into reality.

Furthermore, they have accused the formerly outlawed Jesuits of Truth of orchestrating a nefarious campaign aimed at fostering distrust in the foundational tenets of science and archaeology among the general populace. This campaign is perceived as an effort to undermine public confidence in the integrity of governmental institutions and to destabilize the widely accepted framework of mainstream science.

The overwhelming majority of government-funded scientists, approximately 90%, are reported to support the Ministry of Truth and Harmony, particularly in light of Commissar Harris's assertion that the Krypton Theory represents nothing more than Russian disinformation, thereby framing it as an unwarranted assault on the credibility of science itself, particularly in relation to its esteemed figure, Old Doc F, often referred to as the original Beagle Guy.

Many scholars, who may lack proficiency in ancient Arcadian—the language believed to have been used for the initial transcription of these oral narratives—might have missed critical nuances in the written accounts.

These nuances elucidate that during the galactic conflict, a formidable kinetic weapon was established on Earth, purportedly functioning by harnessing a synergy of the planet's magnetic and gravitational forces to produce a potent plasma-like beam. This beam was reportedly employed to vaporize the water in the planet's atmosphere.

According to several anonymous scientists from DARPA, this intense plasma ray would heat the upper atmospheric layers to such an extent that it would emit a red luminescence, thereby altering the appearance of our yellow sun to a fiery red hue when observed from the surface.

Furthermore, scientists have identified on Mars the remnants of a significant, jagged incision across the terrain, which bears a striking resemblance to a cut made by a plasma arch torch.

The discourse surrounding social media is presently dominated by the weighty inquiry: "Is it the same direct energy weapon or a different one?"

It is important to acknowledge that providing a definitive answer to this question exceeds my professional capacity and expertise.

Any contributions I could make to this dialogue would likely amount to conjecture, which is explicitly prohibited by the principles outlined in our Jesuit of Truth bylaws, as revised during our 2024 International Conference dedicated to the Advancement of Truth.

It is important to clarify that while I possess a certain degree of insight into these matters, my ability to share this knowledge is significantly limited by various non-disclosure agreements stemming from my education at the Alexandria Mystery School (The Home Study Course).

Additionally, my restricted access to their extensive library and Hall of Records further inhibits my capacity to disclose critical information that could potentially transform the ongoing discourse in a profound manner.

It is worth suggesting that much of what has been imparted through our traditional public education systems has been fundamentally misleading, crafted to suppress the potential for the general populace to challenge and confront the elite ruling class.

This manipulation appears to be aimed at maintaining the status quo, reminiscent of the aspirations of the figure known as the Madman Ahriman, who envisioned a return to a so-called "Peace and Harmony" reminiscent of the 13th Century.

In that era, it was Ahriman's thought that the common people possessed little in terms of material wealth, yet were portrayed as content, a narrative largely constructed by their overlords and the elite, serving to reinforce their dominance and control over society.

The discussion must pause here, as the Jesuits of Truth have only recently been reinstated after a period of prohibition.

It is not my intention to provoke the remnants of the Ahriman Coalition, which includes the World Economic Forum affiliates and those who consider themselves Jedi Refugees.

These groups were abandoned when Ahriman and his demonic forces retreated to the safety of Moon Base Alpha.

They may once again amplify their demands for the complete expulsion of the Jesuits, whom they disparage as a disorganized collection of anti-social individuals.

These critics assert that the Jesuits derive pleasure from disseminating uncomfortable truths, claiming that their actions are solely aimed at undermining the tranquility and decorum of civilized society.

The perspective I present may not align with the views of many, yet it reflects my sincere assessment as someone who has overcome an addiction to Red

Engaging in the practice of freebasing this mixture, when executed with precise measurements, can evoke an extraordinary experience akin to transcending into alternate realms.

In this altered state, vivid imagery unfolds before the observer, reminiscent of a high-quality promotional reel that precedes a cinematic feature.

It is noteworthy to mention that this experience differs significantly from those reported by individuals who engage in remote viewing or channeling practices.

In this particular mental state, I intentionally directed my attention towards the concluding moments of the planet Krypton, and upon my return, I proceeded to create these illustrations.

you to delve deeper into their significance, as I find myself at a loss for interpretation.

It is important to note that I am in the process of overcoming my addiction to Red Curry Pancake Mixture, which may further complicate my insights. What else could you anticipate from such a situation?
